a big congregation. Before his sermon was one-third through he had almost every man and woman in the church shouting for joy.

Monszaro is tall, well built and about twenty-eight year old. He says he has eight wives, seven of whom are in Africa. The eighth accompanies him on his trips. He rays he is a native of Zu-luland. South Africa, and came to America seven years ago. He has spent three years exhibiting himself in a museum and going to a school in Tennessee. He speaks modestly of his intellectual attainments, and says he had not learned all that is in the books as yet, although he hopes soon to do so. He has been back to Africa twice and expects to go again in a year or so. His father, he says, has forty wives and is a Jo-jo, or medicine man. The wives are bought from their parents. The first wife is the royal wife, but if she dies without bearing children the husband may get another of the same family on credit.

sweet potatoes, tumblers, bowls, pitchers, knives, forks and spoons." He is also a singer. "There is nothing in his concerts," the announcement concludes, to color the cheeks of the most re-

Pastor Kincade introduced his Royal Highness to the congregation as "the Prince and King of Africa," who had a $6,000 suit of clothes, which, however, he had not brought to church with him. Then, turning to his guest, he said:
"Brother Monszuro, take the pulpit and say what you please." And Broth-twang, and said he would take his text after he had gotten warmed up to his work. "I have come," he quoted. "that ye shall have life, and have it more abundantly." "You are aware of the fact," he continued, "that life is an important thing, and you can't do without it. We all must have it. Without it we can't exist, we can't eat or sleep or enjoy ourselves.

"Yes, photographer-well, he goe out with his machine and takes pic-tures. He can take the picture of the sun, but he can't take the picture of life. "No, indeed; that he can't," said several of the congregation.

"I tell you," went on the Prince, "if you want to find out what life is you've got to go down in the magazine of prayer and fill up your canteens with P. B. Hooe, W. B. Smoot, F. L. Smith. grace and go into the fight against the devil.

"Of radical matters," he said, "We are Africans. It's a big thing to be an African. Solomon said 'Though I'm black I'm pretty.' David was a colored man.' Further on in his sermon the Prince called out: "Are there any sinners here?" A man and a woman stood up. "All right, we are going to save you to-night. I want you to take your stand either for the devil or the Lord. You can't serve two masters. serve the devil and the Lord at the same time, and you can't let the bad people go with the good people. It don't do for a good man to marry a bad woman. If a couple like that marries there'll be heaven on one side and which has been given, was remarkable. At the conclusion of his discourse the Prince proceeded to convert the two sinners. He believed in vigorous measures, he said, and was willing to fight at any time. He was going to being those two sinners to the "Throne of Grace" whether they wanted to or not. And he did. When he was t rough with them they were ready for enrollment on probation. A collection of $18 was taken up.—Balt, Sun,
